SEVENTH SUNDAY OF ORDINARY TIME
24 February 2019 Year C

Next Week's Readings: (Eighth Sunday of Ordinary Time)
Ecclesiasticus 27: 4-7; 1 Corinthians 15:54-58; Luke 6: 39-45

We often speak of what is best for everyone. It is usually called “the common good”. The down side of such an idea is that those who “don’t fit” can end up feeling marginalized. Those for whom it is a “good fit” can be led to thinking that they are right and the others are wrong – a sort of might is right mentality. The reaction against this usually takes the form of petitions, claims for rights, protest marches and so on, even to the point where individual rights and situations are often triumphed over the status quo and an individual’s situation becomes greater than the good of the group.

In Luke’s Gospel, Jesus challenged the status quo of His time. He speaks of loving enemies, of sharing possessions with others and not expecting a return of the favour, of turning the other cheek to insults.

Is there any room for radical ideas today? – Love is not a radical idea. We are encouraged to love the planet, the solar system, the animals, our forests and perhaps even each other. But listening with love may be a radical idea, especially to those who I see as being different from me – different in age, race, religion, ethnicity, orientation. I’m not talking about listening so that I can help “fix” them. Rather, to move away from the “them and us” way of thinking and to live an alternative as Jesus challenged His disciples to do.

As we keep growing in understanding of each other, it is important that channels of communication are kept open as well. Listening in love may bring about new insights into what we have traditionally thought of and understood as the common good.

It might be about working through a process from an individual situation to a clearer understanding by all of what is for the best.

When the listening stops, that’s when the walls start getting built.
